IT IS HIS LAST AND BEST. LORD MONTAGU'S PAGE G. P. R. JAMES.

G. P. R. JAMES.

"What is best in the inexhaustible vein of James is preserved, and what is least effective in his style is repudisted in "Lord Montagu's Page." Written by one unknown to fame, it would be halled as of rare promise; and the exquisite manuer in which Messrs. Childs & Federson have issued it seems to forestell the new vigor and grace bestowed by its prolific author upon this fresh and pleasing errassation of a pen quite as remarkable for the correct minuties of historical detail, as for artistic sequence of incident and kindly tone of feeling. In the great lack of entertaining books that signalizes the present season, numerous readers will thank most heartily an old friend, for thus coming bravely to the resone and giving them something to begule and cheer, amuse and enliven the languid hours of the Summer solution."

will be found to be his masterpiece, greatly excelling the best as former romances, although be has gained from them
A WORLD-WIDE AND INEXTINGUISHABLE FAME!

In the "WHITE WIZARD," he seems to have seized a MEPHISTOPHELIAN PEN, and drawn, in words of living grace and beauty, the FAIREST SCENES OF THE DREAM-WORLD OF ROMANCE!

The scenes are laid partially in our own New-York, partially in the tropic city of Hayana, and partially on the flowers above. The scenes are laid partially in our own New-York, partially in the tropic city of Havana, and partially on the flowers shores of Fiorida—that El Derado of buds and blossoms. Through the magic glass of the romance, he shows us the forms of swart-skinned and untamed Indian braves, with their "mild-eyed, melancholy" maident—of brave but cruel deeperadoes and pirates schooner's snowy cloud of canvas—the feathery foliace of paims—the ennests of tropic akies—and many more gimpose of maure in her most varied and fascinating phases. Woven turough all, and underlying the whole wood of good and purple thought threads of fantasie, is a dark, impenetrable mystery, which bears closely upon many of the historical fasts of the last forty years connected with the Florida War.
